Setting Goals is a Way to Build a Growth Mindset

People who have goals that are written down, with pictures surrounding them, and they revisit them, are 18 times more likely to accomplish their goals than those people who don't. We are now mid-way through the year, take this time to have students reflect on their progress throughout the year, and where they hope to be in 5 months – July. What grades do they strive for, what do they want to improve on personally, etc. And, as a teacher, take this time to do the same for yourself. What goals do you have for your practice and instruction to push yourself through the second half of the year?
